Craig Spencer focuses on land use, natural resources, and environmental law matters across various industries. He advises developers of commercial, residential, and educational projects on entitlement strategies and California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) compliance and conducts due diligence for the acquisition, disposition, and leasing of property. Craig has assisted clients in developing housing and mixed-use projects, corporate R&D and office campuses, and industrial facilities.

Before joining Coblentz, Craig was a land use associate at Cox, Castle & Nicholson LLP in San Francisco. Craig previously served as a legal intern for the Natural Resources Law Section of the California Attorney General's Office. Before law school, Craig worked for the Natural Resources Defense Council in Beijing and Chicago.

Craig is a regular contributor to the firm's Unfamiliar Terrain blog, which provides insights into the complex Bay Area land use landscape. He co-authors the monthly "What We're Reading, Watching, and Listening To" feature.

Craig holds a J.D. from the University of California, Berkeley School of Law, where he served as Editor-in-Chief of Ecology Law Quarterly and earned a Certificate of Specialization in Environmental Law. He received his B.A. in history from Northwestern University.
