Daniel Reardon focuses on land use and development law, including local planning and zoning regulations, state housing and subdivision law, and the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA). Dan advises clients on large-scale development projects from purchase agreements and due diligence to final entitlement approval. He helps clients navigate issues related to the California Coastal Act, the Subdivision Map Act, Density Bonus Law, and novel state housing laws, such as AB 2011 and SB 79.

Before joining Coblentz, Daniel was an associate with boutique land use law firms in Los Angeles. Daniel previously served as a law clerk to the California Governor's Office of Planning and Research, where he worked to develop frameworks for transportation mitigation fees for development projects.

Daniel earned his J.D. from the University of California, Los Angeles School of Law in 2019, where he was chief managing editor of the Pacific Basin Law Journal, and concurrently obtained a Master of Urban and Regional Planning from the University of California, Los Angeles Luskin School of Public Affairs. Daniel earned his B.A. in East Asian Studies from Yale University in 2014.
