Eric Hieber represents real estate developers, owners, and investors at all stages of the development life cycle, with an emphasis on representing clients in the drafting and negotiation of design and construction contracts. He has extensive experience counseling clients during construction of medium to large-scale projects, including project administration, contract interpretation, risk assessments, and dispute resolution. Eric's representations include a diverse range of property types, including office, residential, mixed-use, industrial, sports venues, and cultural institutions across the United States.

Eric also has substantial experience representing developers in high stakes litigation involving construction and real estate. Eric is a civil engineer and brings real-world experience to his practice from his time at one of California's largest general contractors, where he managed project design development, estimating, procurement, contracting, and construction administration.

Eric also advises technology companies and startups in the areas of real estate and construction technology.

Prior to joining Coblentz, Eric was an associate at Greenberg Traurig, LLP.

Eric earned his J.D., magna cum laude, from the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, William S. Boyd School of Law. He earned his B.S. in Civil Engineering, with distinction, from the University of Nevada, Reno.
